NOTES FROM THE PASTOR

Connections are what make the world go round. I would not be where I am today without being in relationship with others. Last weekend I went to my alma mater to celebrate my ten year college reunion and homecoming. I live pretty close to where I went to school, so how is it that I forgot about this milestone, how is it that I forgot to rsvp to visit a place that is so special to me? Life happens, life gets busy, but don't forget to embrace each moment, embrace each other and embrace the places that shaped who you are today. Stepping back on campus even for a couple hours was a highlight for me.

Walking past the president's house, library, chapel and down College St. felt so different, but walking down these old familiar ways with some really good friends made me feel whole. We chatted about old memories, where we have been since the pandemic, and where we are in life now. We laughed, hugged, and said good bye once again. Communities have the power to make us feel welcome and loved, I pray we continue to grow into a community like this. I pray that this church is a place people keep coming to, keep coming back to and keep engaging in. As we step into homecoming time at our local schools and alma maters, may we remember the places that built us and keep building the places important to us now.
