NOTES FROM THE PASTOR

Some of you know I am from an old farming family, the farm that my parents live on has been in our family for generations. We live through the seasons, we trust in the seasons and we know eventually harvest will come-- if you plant the seeds. The seasons can not always be predictable but change always remains. The leaves will change colors, the corn stalks will dry up, the rains eventually come and time passes. Autumn is my favorite season and it always feels bittersweet. Summer has come and gone, Winter is near and the earth shows its age. Age is a privilege, time is always moving forward, I encourage you to embrace each season. Until Spring comes again, try to enjoy the Winter and learn from the wisdom of experiencing it once more.
